Rev. Alexander H. Abbott. now of Winchester. Mass., where he has been residing since concluding his service as an army chaplain at Camp Upton and Camp Devens, was the preacher Sunday morning at the United Congregational church, where there was a large congregation. A week ago last Thursday the church extended him a unanimous call to become its pastor, an invitation which he accepted in a few brief but carnest words delivered before he began his sermon. He is to begin his pastorate in the fall, but will preach at the church a number of times before then.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you," was the text from which he preached. He brought out the thought that seeking first the kingdom of God, like some of the other beacon fires of the faith, is offtimes dismissed because it is said to be to idealistic. That phrase is so self satisfying, so safe, so cowardly. It is the refuge of mental lethargy, the place of security for the lazy self satisfied man who does not want to think hard. Seeking first the kingdom of God—it's too much of a hazard for him to take.

They gave the alarm and the Palmer Hose company responded, but the fire had spread so quickly that the stream of water they put on was of no avail. Neighbors of Mr. Stark who was at church at the time of the fire, managed with difficulty to get the three horses in the barn to a place of safety and also saved four wagons and three harnesses, but the remaining contents of the barn were totally destroyed. There were farming tools and other implements in the building as well as four tons of hay.

Mr. Stark, fearing that the house, which is only about 50 feet from the barn, would take fire, telephoned to Chief Howard L. Stanton of the local department for assistance. As the fire was out of the city limits, Chief Stanton secured permission from Alderman Joseph A. George, chairman of the fire commissioners, to take the pumper to the fire. The run was made in quick time, but the firemen were unable to do anything to save the barn and de-estimate his loss on Sunday evening.
